Keeping Current

- Keeping current with new ways of keeping current is a big job!
- Now more than ever new(ish) technologies, tools and services exist to help you.
- Online tools can help (blogs, podcasts, email lists...)
- Alerting services, both by email and RSS feeds, can keep you up-to-date with research in your field.

Email Alerts

- Setup is usually simple
- Available for new contents, search histories, citations, etc.
- Sometimes requires you to sign up first

Doubly fed induction generator systems for wind turbines
S Muller, M Deicke... - IEEE Industry applications ..., 2002 - ieeexplore.ieee.org
Abstract: This article shows that adjustable speed generators for wind turbines are necessary when output power becomes higher than 1 MW. The doubly fed induction generator (DFIG) system presented in this article offers many advantages to reduce cost and

Wind turbines emulating inertia and supporting primary frequency control
J Morren, SWH De Haan, WL Kling... - IEEE Transactions on ..., 2006 - ieeexplore.ieee.org
Abstract: The increasing penetration of variable-speed wind turbines in the electricity grid will result in a reduction of the number of connected conventional power plants. This will require changes in the way the grid frequency is controlled. In this letter, a method is

Electrical signature analysis based condition monitoring and diagnostics techniques for wind turbines

P Zhang, D Lu, S Salem - Diagnostics for Electrical Machines, Power Electronics ..., 2017

Wind power has become the most important component of renewable energy with advances in technology in recent years. Reducing operations and maintenance cost effectively and detecting the fault timely for wind turbines are critical to expand wind power use. Due to

An experimental investigation on the wake interferences among wind turbines sited in aligned and staggered wind farms

W Tian, A Ozbay, H Hu - Wind Energy, 2017

Abstract An experimental investigation was conducted for a better understanding of the wake interferences among wind turbines sited in wind farms with different turbine layout designs. Two different types of inflows were generated in an atmospheric boundary layer

Effects of the Subgrid-Scale Modeling in the Large-Eddy Simulations of Wind Turbines

U Ciri, MV Salvetti, K Carrasquillo, C Santoni, GV Iungo... - Direct and Large-Eddy ..., 2018

The increased demand for wind energy had led to a continuous increase in the size of wind turbines and as a consequence in the size of wind farms. A potential drawback of using large arrays of wind turbines is the decrease in efficiency due to the wake interference. Although simple wake

Blade pitch control for floating wind turbines: Design and experiments using a scale model

N Hara, Y Nihei, K Iijima, K Konishi - ... Applications \(CCTA\), 2017 IEEE Conference on, 2017

We present experimental results for blade pitch control in a scale model of a floating wind turbine. The blade pitch controller was designed using an H^∞ loop-shaping design procedure and its performance was evaluated by using an actual scale model. The

When we first released the LibCal Equipment Booking Add-On Module, we wanted to integrate room bookings with the equipment reservation process. Wouldn't it be neat if a patron could reserve a room and related equipment in the exact same reservation? And also, wouldn't it be great if we could revamp the way Room Bookings calculates

A 'Sign In' link is also present. Below the navigation bar is a large banner with the text 'Welcome to JournalTOCs' and 'Where researchers keep up-to-date'. Underneath the banner is a secondary navigation bar with links: 'Search', 'Browse', 'Customise', 'Suggest', 'Develop', 'About', 'Help', and 'News'. The main content area is divided into several sections. On the left, there's a search box with a 'Go' button and two radio buttons for 'for Journals by Title or ISSN' and 'for Articles by Keywords'. Below this is a 'NEW ADDED JOURNALS' section listing various journals. In the center, there's a large text block describing JournalTOCs as the largest free collection of scholarly journal TOCs, mentioning 24,402 journals and 10,053 hybrid journals. Below this, it states that JournalTOCs is for researchers, students, librarians, and anyone looking for the latest scholarly articles. Further down, it mentions that JournalTOCs alerts users when new issues of their followed journals are published. On the right, there's a 'TOP PUBLISHERS' section listing various publishers like Elsevier, Springer-Verlag, Taylor & Francis, etc. At the bottom right, there's a 'TOP SUBJECTS' section. How Do You Organize Research Citations in Policy Documents?

There is a lot of interest in finding references to research in policy documents to help tell the stories of the research. We took a look at categorizing the different types of policy topics to help make more sense out of these references. We would love to hear your feedback. Is this important? Do you agree with the categories?

A screenshot of the Cambridge Journals Facebook page. The cover photo is a collage of various images including a blue globe, ancient columns, a tiger's face, a colorful pattern, a green forest, a yellow crane, and a classical statue. The page header shows the Cambridge Journals logo and the word 'Publisher'. Below the header are tabs for 'Timeline', 'About', 'Photos', 'Likes', and 'More'. On the left sidebar, it shows '9,538 people like this', an 'Invite friends to like this Page' button, an 'ABOUT' section with a link to 'http://journals.cambridge.org/', and an 'APPS' section with a 'Promos' button. The main content area shows a post from 'Cambridge Journals' dated '1 hr' ago. The post text reads: 'Read the latest JMBA blog by Mathew White on the research his team at the European Centre for Environment & Human Health has been working on to shed light on how the sea might boost health and wellbeing. http://ow.ly/YBA75'. Below the text is a photo of a man and a woman walking on a grassy cliff overlooking the ocean. The post caption reads: 'Coastal living found to improve health « Environmental, Earth & Life... The study found that people are more likely to have good health the closer they live to the sea and this effect increased in deprived areas.'

Pulled Cuttlefish Ink Noodle

I don't think I've ever heard of anyone making a pulled noodle with cuttlefish ink, but it worked nicely. Bread flour, one egg, two small packets of cuttlefish ink and water to make a stiff dough. Kneaded half an hour or so, rolled out, oiled and cut into thick strips, rested for 5 hours. Then pulled and as you can see stuck to the counter top on the ends so they didn't spring back. Normally I throw them right in the water, but I wanted to dry these. I think they're stunning.

So how to cook them? I think in a roasting pan, they're about 6 feet long! Then maybe serve in dashi stock with mentaiko. We'll see.

Research Blogs

Academic blogs can be interesting sources of new and cutting edge research.

The screenshot shows the Royal Society of Biology blog interface. At the top right, there are links for 'About Us' and 'Blog roll'. The main header features the title 'Royal Society of Biology blog' with the tagline 'A unified voice for biology' and the organization's logo. To the right of the logo is a close-up image of a blue and green lizard's head. Below the header, a section titled '« OLDER POSTS' contains the article 'Bringing pantomime into the biology lecture theatre' by Dr. Ian Turner, dated September 12, 2017. The article text describes Dr. Turner as the 2017 HE Bioscience Teacher of the Year and mentions the 2018 award nominations. A 'PROLOGUE' section follows, discussing the history of pantomime. At the bottom of the article, there are category and tag links. On the right side of the page, there is a search bar and a 'Recent Posts' section listing several articles, including 'Bringing pantomime into the biology lecture theatre' and 'Policy Lunchbox: unlocking teaching development'. The entire page is framed by a light blue border decorated with various biology-related icons like a dragonfly, a petri dish, an ant, a tree, a cloud, a person, a flower, and laboratory glassware.

Bringing pantomime into the biology lecture theatre

Posted on September 12, 2017 by Dr Ian Turner

Dr. Ian Turner, our 2017 HE Bioscience Teacher of the Year, is a National Teaching Fellow based at the University of Derby. He is currently Head of Forensic Science but his main teaching areas are genetics and science communication.

Nominations for the 2018 HE Bioscience Teacher of the Year award are now open.

PROLOGUE

Pantomime as an entertainment and art form originates in Greece and came to fashion in the ancient theatres of Rome during the reign of Emperor Augustus. Pantomime has been part of English entertainment since the 18th century Harlequinade and the traditional fairy tale pantomimes of the 19th Century.

The screenshot displays the BMJ Blogs homepage. At the top, a blue header contains the 'BMJ Blogs' logo. Below this, a black bar with white text reads 'BMJ Blogs'. The main content area is titled 'Our blogs' and features six blog categories in a grid:

- Acupuncture in Medicine Blog: Analysis and discussion of the latest news, research findings and policy developments in acupuncture in medicine; mainly relating to evidence-based, Western medical acupuncture.
- Archives of Disease in Childhood Blog: A peer-reviewed journal for health professionals and researchers covering conception to adolescence.
- thebmjopinion: Richard Lehman's weekly review of medical journals, BMJ editors at large, Guest bloggers, Junior doctors' blogs.
- BMJ Case Reports Blog: A fully searchable resource publishing cases across all disciplines, highlighting clinically important information on common and rare conditions.
- BMJ Clinical Evidence Blog: Discussions on how to teach and practise EBM, developments and trends in the EBM community, and the key findings of our latest updated overviews.
- BMJ Global Health Blog: Comment, discussion and debate on all aspects of global health across BMJ.

On the right side, there are two sections:

- Latest from BMJ: A list of news items with dates, including 'General practice funding rose by 3% last year (20 Sep 2017)', 'IT glitch forces GPs to cancel shifts (19 Sep 2017)', 'Legal aid cuts may have fuelled rise in clinical negligence costs (19 Sep 2017)', 'A smoke-free generation? Amidst criticism of the peer review process, the valuable contributions of reviewers should be defended

As flaws in the peer review process are highlighted and calls for reform become more frequent, it may be tempting for some to denigrate and dismiss the contributions of the reviewers themselves. Maxine David has been witness to this and here makes an appeal to give space to recognise those who offer their time and expertise voluntarily and generously.

It is difficult as an academic today, perhaps especially so for those working in the UK, not to feel that our profession is under attack. Regular readers of Times Higher Education or Twitter will not have missed Lord Adonis's recent uninformed criticism of an academic's life today. I was not alone in "hitting back" and the sense of collegiality that Lord Adonis unwittingly unleashed was welcome and uplifting. That was soon undermined for me personally by reading comments on Facebook that fell into that all-too-familiar category of editor-and-reviewer-bashing and which drew a queue of others wanting a place on that particular bandwagon. As a journal editor who has given up a fair amount of my spare time to ask others to give up theirs to review new submissions, this was ever so slightly depressing.
